GODFREY'S BRITISH GUARDS.

England's Famous Military Band to Visit Us To-day.

Lieutenant Dan Godfrey's British Grenadier Guards' band is about to make a tour of the world, and one of the first points at which the band will appear after arriving in this country will be Norfolk.

London Figaro says that this is the "most military band in the world." It is the favorite band of Queen Victoria and gives the concerts at many of the royal functions. The English people are very proud of the Guards' band and wherever there is an Englishman on the face of the earth there you will find a man who believes that there is no other band in the world like it.

Lieutenant Godfrey is the only bandmaster who has ever given an officer's commission in the British army. "The lieutenant himself," says the London Daily Telegraph, "is one of the most popular men in England."

The Scottish Night says that his name is "familiar as a household word among musical circles and the general public." The London Standard says that "if Dan Godfrey's band were 'halved it could stand on its head and beat Herr Strauss' Viennese musicians into human semi-quavers."

Lieutenant Godfrey gave his initial concert in the United States at the white house in compliment to President and Mrs. McKinley and the Cabinet on Monday, March 6th. On the following Monday night the band appeared at the Grand Opera House in Atlanta, and from here will continue on its tour around the world. It will cross this continent, playing in the largest cities and may take in Mexico. It will go from America to Australia. The band has visited America before and in New York, Boston and throughout Canada it received a great ovation. People were enthusiastic and were frequently raised to their feet by the stirring strains.

Mr. Krebber, the ripe musical scholar and masterly critic of the New York Tribune, said the band was an "excellent military organization, even and consistent in tone, accurate and elastic in utterance." "It is, indeed," he said, "much of its excellence being due to the skill of the men who handle the principal solo instruments."

Tickets are now on sale for these two grand performances to-day, Matinee at 2:30; to-night at 8:15.

"THE HIGHWAYMAN."

The Broadway Theater Opera Company, headed by Camille D'Arville, will present "The Highwayman" at the Academy of Music next week. In "The Highwayman" there is a consistent and continuously told plot devoid of vulgarity, enlivened by wholesome music and good comedy.

DISTINGUISHED DUTCH SOLDIER.

Mr. Leonard C. Van Noppen, the distinguished Dutch scholar of New York, will entertain the members of the Lyceum next Monday evening at the Academy of Music. Mr. Van Noppen will speak of "Dutch Literature," a subject which opens wide vistas of instruction and entertainment. Most of us are not aware that Holland has as many literary treasures as we. If we hear Mr. Van Noppen, we shall change our opinion. Tickets for non-members at the box office.
